| Sources of lifetime income | $ | | |
| Cash flow surplus/gap | $ | | |
| One way to make up any difference between your income and expenses is to draw down on assets over time. | | | |
| Total investable assets | $ | | |

Estimate your retirement living expenses

Get a clear picture of what your retirement expenses will look like. The first category to think about is your must-haves. These include things like food, clothing, and shelter, but could also be anything you absolutely want to make sure you have in retirement. The second category to consider is discretionary expenses—things that may be important to you but aren't necessary and could be cut back on in a pinch. After you finish this retirement expense worksheet, you might also want to think about how these expenses may change over time, or if you expect any large one-time purchases in the future. For example, think about how retirement might have different phases and different expenses in each of those phases.
